Not illustrated. 1920 edition. Excerpt: .engineers in foreign countries can be summed up very briefly. The opportunities today are rather limited. I believe they will increase somewhat slowly for awhile, then with growing rapidity. In the last America has had no incentive to develop foreign trade and particularly no incentive to encourage the development of foreign enterprises requiring capital. As we become more and more a manufacturing nation, as we need more and more to import food supplies, we shall be forced into the foreign field and our interests will expand in every direction. I think the countries offering the greatest opportunities today are South America and Spain and in the not far distant future, China, Russia and Siberia. The crux of the whole question is the desire and ability of the investing public to absorb foreign securities. As they do this so will our activities expand. The...
