For a like reason, infinitely strengthened in force by its comparative weakness, a small state may justly object to the determination of international rules by the action of any less than the whole number of states. It seems to be indisputable, therefore, that the development of international law, while sure unless the wheels of human progress are to be reversed, is inevitably slow and is likely to be measured by steps which may succeed one another at long intervals. A seeming but not real exception to the proposition that the practically unanimous consent of civilized states is the basis of genuine international law should not fail...
