Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Fooling Father a Comedy in One Act Scene. - The living-room in Mr. Samuel Somerville s country house. Entrances r., l. and c. At R., near back, is a small closet supposed to contain a safe. The safe itself need not be visible from the audience. The room is comfortably though not ostentatiously furnished. Down stage, a little to the left of C., is a small table on which burns a lamp. Beside the table, seated in an armchair, is Mr. S., reading a book. He is an elderly man, rather stout, with gray side-whiskers, and wears a smoking-jacket and slippers. He closes his book with a snap. Mr. S. Confound it, I m nervous! In the past half hour I ve read just three pages, and now I don t know what I ve read. (Looks at his watch.) What! Nearly nine o clock! Where on earth can the young people be? Likely enough Paul and his friend stopped off at the village, but I fully expected Anna long before this. I can t...
